Financial Aid at Princeton

Affordable for All

Princeton University is committed to access and affordability.

We provide financial aid in the form of grants, which do not have to be repaid. Our aid program does not require any borrowing, so students can graduate debt free. We were the first university in the country to eliminate the need to take out loans.

Our generous financial aid has ensured the continued and growing enrollment of a diverse group of students from low- and middle-income backgrounds.

60% of undergraduates receive financial aid.

THE PRINCETON FINANCIAL AID ESTIMATOR

Each student's need is determined individually based on family resources, and is met in full with grants and a campus job. Princeton's confidential Financial Aid Estimator can help you determine if you would qualify for aid and the type of award you might receive.

The estimator is available at admission.princeton.edu/cost-aid/financial-aid-estimator.

Note: The aid estimator is valid only for U.S. and Canadian families.

Zero debt is possible.

82% of recent seniors graduated debt free.

$9,000

The average total indebtedness for graduating Princeton seniors who chose to borrow.

For comparison, about 70 percent of college seniors in the United States graduated with loans in 2016, and they carried an average debt of $30,100 (Source: The Project on Student Debt).

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Will applying for aid hurt my chance of being admitted to Princeton?

No. There is no disadvantage whatsoever in the admission process for financial aid applicants.

How do you decide who gets financial aid?

Financial aid is awarded based on need only. We use the information you supply on your financial aid application to determine how much support we will provide. We do not offer merit-based aid or athletic scholarships.

Before I apply, can I get a sense of whether I might qualify for aid?

Yes. Just enter your financial information into the Princeton Financial Aid Estimator online for a quick idea of how much aid you may be qualified to receive. (Valid only for U.S. and Canadian families)

Will I receive the same amount of financial aid every year?

It is our policy to meet students' full demonstrated need each year. Award amounts may vary from year to year, based on changes in a family's financial circumstances and Princeton's cost of attendance.

Grants, not loans.

100% of tuition, college fee, and room and board for families earning up to $65,000 is covered for students admitted to the Class of 2022.
